Modern Slavery Statement

Our commitment

Redpaths is committed to an ethical supply chain. Modern slavery in all its forms, including forced labour, human trafficking and exploitative labour practices, is a crime in New Zealand and much of the world. Redpaths acts ethically and with integrity in all its activities, and does not tolerate or condone modern slavery in any part of its supply chain.

Our supply chain

Redpaths sources products from local and global supply partners, including their manufacturing partners. We recognise that, like any distributor of imported goods, our supply chain carries modern slavery risk, and we take reasonable steps to manage it.

What we do

- We expect all suppliers to comply with New Zealand law and with United Nations guidance on modern slavery and human rights.
- We ask our key suppliers to confirm, every two years, that they have reviewed their own supply chains, including manufacturing, for modern slavery risk.
- We record supplier confirmations in our Compliance & Assurance Register.
- We prefer socially responsible products and suppliers, and will review our relationship with any supplier that does not meet these expectations.
